

Rutgers Center for Gender Justice and Law Program Research Assistant

Application Deadline June 1, 2023

Description

The Rutgers Center for Gender Justice and Law (CGJL) is accepting applications for paid part-time research assistants to conduct research related to race and gender in the legal profession. Specifically, the project includes identifying new bar rules prohibiting harassment in the legal profession and collating research on the intersection of race and gender on progression and retention in law firms. CGJL facilitates interdisciplinary and publicly engaged research, curricular, and programming initiatives in furtherance of intersections of gender-, race-, sexuality- and economic-based equity in law and policy. The Center’s focus is both domestic and international.

The position requires at least twenty hours at a rate of $17 per hour. The term of hire will be during the summer, but possibly longer. Candidates must have demonstrated interest in gender, racial, economic, and social justice; strong academic credentials; and have excellent communication and organizational skills. The CGJL Research Assistant position will start in Summer 2023.
